

13/03/2008 16:01

To beStrong@fhb.gov.hk
cc
bcc
Subject health care reform

Urgent     Return receipt     Sign     Encrypt

I am aged 53, will be retiring in 5 years time. As my company has been providing me with very good medical coverage so I haven't invested in any medical insurance plan yet.

Therefore, in general, I welcome Government's determination to break the ground, hoping that there's something I could piggyback on.

The question I have is:

For relatively well-off retirees, they would like to have very good coverage that is able to pay their hospitalisation in private hospitals for an extended period of time - they don't mind paying a premium. Will the gov't plan cover this minority group? Or the gov't plan is only for the mass and middle income group so people who want to have a "luxury" medical plan should also be seeking private medical coverage at the same time to supplement the gov't plan?

Regards

p.s. Please note that I would prefer to stay anonymous